Hello {{Hiring Manager}};

The ability to find someone who can break complex topics down and explain them across departments is a person everyone is looking for. Someone who's organized, precise and technical are the 3 features I brought to the companies I've previously worked for.

These three traits are what I've learned to strive for with my 7 years working professionally as an implementation developer at Google and a UX/UI designer at Apple. However, I'm looking to downsize from big corporations, with too many cooks in the kitchen, and work for a small to medium business where:

- I can contribute in organizational aspects in a business and cross communicate between teams.
- As well as strengthen training documentation once I've been brought up to speed.
- My biggest strength comes into play which is my ability to listen to others and learn from them has allowed me to create a roadmap with possible predictions on where we'll end up.
- The company offers a collaborative work environment. Where I'd be working with a diverse set of open minded peers that leads to innovative possibilities.

Now as a certified fullstack developer in Python I can translate my expertise across multiple departments seamlessly. I work well with developers as well as work well with sales representatives since I've worked on both ends for a company.

I'll follow up in the next couple of days to see if this letter resonates with you and in the meantime to put a face on my application and a bit more on who I am you can take a look at my portfolio here(https://github.com/jackokramer/portfolio). Thank you for your time.
